How do you describe the course to students when they ask “What is this class about?” (Without using the catalog description)?

We live in a global networked world. This means that increasingly people have to interact with others who are from different cultures and/or backgrounds. This course helps you to be a more effective communicator across such differences.

Beyond meeting a General Education requirement, what benefits can students realize from choosing this course?

Students are better positioned to be effective communicators in a wide variety of cultural contexts after taking this class, and they are better prepared to be global citizens.

Other than your major/minor/certificate students, what groups of students could find this course relevant to their degree program or career path?

This course is of value to everyone living in the 21st century. Our global networked information environment demands broad cultural competence.

Catalog Description (Fall 2022 Undergraduate Catalog)

A cultural competence-based approach to contemporary intercultural communication issues in the United States. Topics include consideration of communication practices as they relate to ethnicity, race, religion, gender, sexuality, family structure, social class, age, and ability.
