What is The Center for Dispute Resolution?

The Center for Dispute Resolution (CDR) is housed in the Department of Communication at Missouri State University. It is an independent organization that supports a variety of programs that relate to conflict and provides trainings, offers workshops, and supports research in the field of dispute resolution. The CDR's mission: to help build peaceful communities and enhance the lives of individuals. The CDR accomplishes this by offering conflict resolution, mediation, training, and educational services; by supporting educational programs; by forming collaborative partnerships with key groups; and by providing a network for those interested in the field of dispute resolution to connect and expand their professional knowledge.
