The Quality Initiative Project

• The QIP public affairs assessment is a non-intrusive system for assessing (not grading) student work related to the public affairs mission.

• We gather student work across all disciplines so we may begin to acknowledge students’ understanding and integration of the themes of the Public Affairs Mission and our diversity goals.

• Part of Higher Learning Commission open pathway.

Assignment Prompt

This brief written assignment will serve as a practical application of your statistical knowledge as it pertains to public affairs-related research.

Directions:
Attend the Missouri State University Public Affairs Conference, and go to one of the Distinction in Public Affairs: Student presentations. Attend the entire presentation, take good notes, and then address each of the following.

1. State how the presentation related to our public affairs mission.
2. Summarize the information shared including details about the research design.
3. Provide a critique of the research based on what you have learned about statistics.
4. Share how the presenters’ conclusions could impact others including you.
Group Discussion
Tips for Strong Prompts

• Have the students explicitly make the connection between disciplinary knowledge and public affairs. Reflection is the key.

• A reflection component was the most beneficial.

• Have students demonstrate their understanding of how this new information has impacted their learning/behavior.

• Outside of the classroom: Have students tie the subject matter directly to at least one of the mission pillars. Reflection here is also important.

• The best written cases involving Public Affairs had to do with the reflection on the assignment in terms of some aspect of the PA Mission. Ask students to reflect on the their “research” experience that is part of any library, readings, or other participatory activity/assignment. That can mean connecting to the “bigger picture” a portion of what the PA mission is attempting to channel. That means encouraging students to envision and evoke a larger personal and/or socio-cultural meaning in the assignments.
